Missouri Department of Conservation Shooting Range Program

The Department of Conservation is charged by the Missouri Constitution to manage the fish, forest, and wildlife resources of the state. Part of that management involves allowing citizens to harvest a surplus population of wildlife. To help insure the safety of citizens engaged in hunting, the Department administers a Hunter Education Program. Skills in learning how to safely handle firearms are taught in the program and the development of individual abilities to shoot firearms accurately is encouraged. Safe places are required for firearms practice and shooting ranges designed to meet national safety standards offer needed opportunities.

With this in mind, the Department began to develop safe shooting ranges on lands they owned in 1972. Since that time the Department has added new shooting ranges almost every year. The goal is to provide safe places for people to shoot that are easily accessible, in and around population centers.

The Department meets or exceeds all national safety guidelines for shooting range design. Department ranges are safety inspected at least twice yearly to insure their maintenance and continued safety.
